There is little of the legends visible but NI appears on the reverse, suggesting the mint of Lincoln

129 † Stephen and Queen Matilda. penny, Ornamented or 'York' group, king and queen stg, facing each other, sceptre between, rev. cross fleury over cross pommee, annulets in angles, ornaments in place of legend (S.1315; N. 922; Mack 220), slight edge chip, otherwise toned about very fine and very rare £5000-6000
* purchased C Wolfe

As noted in the St James's Auction 3 catalogue, there has been much controversy over the years about the exact attribution of the so-called 'York' group. That it was struck in Europe seems most unlikely but that it shows much continental influence is undeniable. Unlike the ornaments and lettering on the coins, which seem to betray a French or Flemish origin, the main design of two standing figure seems to derive rather from a Germanic source – many contemporary bracteates and pfennigs show one or two standing figures. This is a device found nowhere else on the coinage of mediaeval England and again underlines the irregular nature of many of the Civil War issues.

130 Eustace FitzJohn, penny, Ornamented or 'York' group, helmeted knight stg. r., holding sword, rev. cross pattee within quatrefoil, pellets within annulets in angles, legend of jumbled letters and ornaments, + E Ω [.....] V (backward) E (S.1318; N.929c; Mack 224var.), nearly very fine but pierced £1000-1200

Most extant specimens show signs of having been gilded and brooch-mounted for use as jewellery. Examples not subject to these indignities are worth a considerable premium.

These extraordinary coins were half a century ahead of their time when they were struck in the 1280s. Although large silver coins were already circulating in Italy and France and were being introduced at around the same time in the Low Countries, it seems that the English economy was not yet sufficiently advanced to require a circulating coin any larger than the penny. Their scarcity today seems to be due to their economic failure and subsequent demonetisation rather than a small initial issue. The fact that so many varieties and dies survive suggests that they were struck in some quantity over a number of years – perhaps a decade or more.

This extraordinary coin suggests that this obverse die was prepared for use at Coventry during Blunt and Whitton's type V, mintmark rose, but was never sent – the C later being partially overstruck by a small lis on the point of the tressure and used in conjunction with a London reverse. North lists type VI for Coventry as well as VI/V mules but makes no mention of an obverse Coventry die with mintmark rose. Blunt & Whitton (BNJ 1945-47) do however state that this obverse is known only from a mule.

The striking of the testoon reflects almost precisely the attempted introduction of the groat in the 1280s [see lot 152]. Following the appearance of the testone in Italy in the 1460s and the even heavier taler in central Europe in the 1480s and 90s, the testoon or shilling was struck on a trial basis around 1502/04. Just as happened two hundred years before, it seems that the English economy was not yet ready for such a high-value piece and the testoon was not finally brought into general circulation until Henry VIII's debased 'third' coinage some 40 years later.

251 † Perkin Warbeck, 'groat', mm. lion, 1494, crowned shield of arms between crowned lis and crowned rose, all within tressure, rev. lis and lion, crown above, rose below, all within tressure (S. - ; N.1758; M.I.21/3), slightly small of flan, as is usual, toned, nearly very fine and extremely rare £3500-3800
* the owner's ticket reads ex Gilboy. The coin, however, was not in the Gilboy sale, Spink 16, July 1981.

Perkin Warbeck, claiming to be the younger brother of Edward V, was pretender to the throne as Richard IV.
It is unlikely that these pieces were ever struck as currency – more likely they were political jettons struck in the Low Countries to promote his claim to the English Crown. A document dated 24 January 1494 (old style) and signed by the pretender leaves, in the event that he has no male children, to Maximilian of Austria, duke of Burgundy and his heirs, the following somewhat optimistic legacy: "His own kingdom of England and France, his duchy of York, his lordship of Ireland and his principality of Wales". See Blunt, BNJ, 1950, pp. 215-216

252 Henry VIII, first coinage, angel, mm. portcullis crowned, the archangel Michael slaying the dragon, rev. ship holding shield, cross above, h and rose at sides (S.2265; N.1760), the obverse struck from a rusty die, otherwise better than very fine £900-1100

255 Henry VIII, third coinage, crown of the double rose, ?Bristol, mm. -/WS(?), crowned double rose between crowned H-R, pellet on inner circle at 7 o'clock, HENRIC 8 ROSA [lis] SINE[quatrefoil] SPINE [rose], rev. crowned shield of arms, crowned H-R at sides, pellet on inner circle at 7 o'clock , DEI GRA ANGL FRA Z HIB REX, stops double annulets (S.2310; N.1836; cf. Schneider 640), creased and cracked along top of shield, otherwise about very fine and a very rare variety £1000-1500

A bewildering variety of stops, abbreviations and legends appears on the Bristol gold coins of the period. That said, the above combination seems to be rare, assuming that the unclear mintmark on the reverse is in fact William Sharrington's WS monogram. The nearest that the cataloguers could find was in Lockett, part XIII, no.4345, described as 'rare' and illustrated on plate VI, where the obverse marks were very similar to the above but the reverse die had the more standard Bristol reading of D G ANGLIE....

Interest in maundy coinage has increased dramatically over the last few years and this has been reflected in the rising prices obtained for such coins. We are happy to present the collector with this unique opportunity to acquire a complete run of maundy sets from their introduction under Charles II to 1980. Many of these dates have disappeared from the market over the last few years and the rare dates that do turn up fetch far more than the catalogue value would suggest.
